Secretary Wilbur Gives Address At Commencement Exercises Before Large Crowd at Theatre

Must Face Problems And Be Ready For Disappointments, Seniors Are Told.

Addressing the 121 graduates of Gettysburg college at the ninety-fifth annual commencement exercises this morning, Curtis D. Wilbur, secretary of the navy, urged the students to "valiantly face" the problems before them for successful lives.

"If mankind is to reach higher and higher levels," he said, "it will be because man has valiantly faced the problems lying before him and has refused to be diverted from the task."

Before launching into the formal portion of his address, Secretary Wilbur, speaking extemporaneously, gave the audience, which packed the Majestic theater, a graphic word picture of the review of the great Atlantic fleet off the Virginia capes last Saturday before the commander-in-chief of the army and navy, President Coolidge.

Draws Comparisons

After pointing to the difference between "Old Ironsides" and the great ships which paraded "slowly and majestically" in review out of Hampton roads, as an example of the development of naval science, Secretary Wilbur said the United States has placed "upon the altar of peace," ships almost equal in value to those in the great Atlantic fleet under the terms of the international limitation of armaments agreement.

The naval secretary said "everyone, who witnessed that great procession of battleships, cruisers, destroyers and submarines last Saturday was impressed with the advancement in science."

Strive For Peace

"But the United States is dedicated to peace, and while naval science is being advanced daily in workshops and laboratories, those in official circles are striving to maintain peace and an undivided union which was preserved upon the historic ground upon which we are gathered," he continued.

Secretary Wilbur was introduced by Dr. Henry W. A. Hanson, president of Gettysburg college, as a former judge of the California supreme court and the head of the country's great navy department.

Many In Procession

The speaker, members of the faculty and those who received honorary degrees, marched into the theater between the members of the senior class facing each other in two long lines along Carlisle street. The seniors, attired in their academic robes, had seats in the front rows of the theater, while the others proceeded to the stage.

While the procession entered the theater, the large audience stood. Music for the processional was furnished by Mrs. S. F. Snyder, playing the theater's pipe organ.

Doctor Hanson was in charge of the exercises. The invocation was given by the Rev. Dr. Jeremiah Zimmerman, Syracuse, New York, a member of the college board of trustees. After the singing of a hymn, Miss Gisela A. Grimm, Gettysburg, salutatorian of the class, gave the salutatory address.

Six Get Degrees

The address of Secretary Wilbur was followed by the address of Herman S. Keiter, Harrisburg, valedictorian of the class.

On behalf of the college, Doctor Hanson conferred honorary degrees upon six persons. Degrees of doctor of divinity were given to the Rev.

Six Honorary Degrees Conferred This Morning; Student Prizes Are Awarded.

The full text of the address delivered by Curtis D. Wilbur, secretary of the navy, before the graduating class of Gettysburg college this morning at the Majestic theater was as follows:

"'No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the Kingdom of God.' In this fashion the Master placed before us one of the fundamental characteristics of success. He that looketh back is not punished for looking backwards, but by his act he demonstrates his incapacity to effectually play the game of life. The football player must keep his eye on the ball, and he who would play the game of life effectually, must ever look forward.

Brain Exceeds All

"The greatest mystery in the universe is the mystery of life, and the greatest problem of life is how to live. If we accept the teaching of evolution, one of the greatest unsolved problems is the origin of life. The evolutionist, however, teaches us that there has been one mighty line of progress, from the mysterious beginnings of life in the primordial cell, to man. It points to the brain of man as the greatest achievement in the scheme of creation. If we can contemplate a development covering millions of years, during which there has been a continuous march forward, until we come to a reasoning, thinking, human being, and recognize that during that long period of years, there have been multitudes of forms of life that had the privilege of moving forward to manhood, but which have failed, either to reach the goal or to make it possible for their successors to do so, we can realize the truth, that it is only by looking forward that it is possible to achieve the Kingdom of Heaven. He who hesitates and looks backwards is lost because by that very fact he exhibits an unfitness for a place in the ever-flowing stream of life.

"It is natural that we should look forward to some acquisition of wealth; or to the gratification of some political ambition; or to the attainment of some position of power; as a place to stop and rest in the conscious achievement of success. We hope we can gather the fruits of success, and enjoy them at our ease. It is undoubtedly right for a man to have his periods of rest and refreshment in preparation for the battle of life, but when that period of rest becomes a permanent abandonment of further effort, the man who thus takes his ease signs his own death warrant. He may live on physically, enjoying some of the comforts of life, but he will have ceased to count.

Problems Never Cease

"With all the hurries and worries; with all the perplexities of life, we would like to feel that some of its problems have been solved, but so long as the factors entering into the problem are living factors, new complications and unexpected conditions will inevitably arise. We think of our government as stabilized by a written constitution, and buttressed by one hundred and fifty years of experience in government. While some of the problems of our government have been solved, for every single problem solved, many others arise. The Civil War settled the fact that the Constitution provided for an indissoluble union. The World War determined that the citizenship of the nation could be rallied to the support of the nation in most effective fashion against the most powerful combination of governments; it demonstrated the loyalty of the citizens to this form of government.

Liberty Hard To Define

"But we find ourselves, at every session of the legislature, and at every term of the courts, presented with multitudes of new questions which require solution in order that the government may live and grow. The legal profession, mostly concerned with government, must grow and keep step with the progress of government and of human life if it is to be worthy of its place in the development of our nation. It is because lawyers in executive, judicial and legislative positions are solving the new problems of this government, that the govern-

FLIERS GREETED BY HINDENBURG

German President Has Interview With Chamberlin and Levine at Capitol.

Berlin, June 8.—(AP)—Germany's veteran president, Field Marshal Von Hindenburg, received Chamberlin and Levine at the executive mansion today and congratulated them on their achievement in spanning the Atlantic by air from New York to Germany.

The interview lasted eighteen minutes. President Von Hindenburg handed each of his visitors a fine framed autographed portrait of himself.

After questioning the Americans as to the details of their flight, he expressed the hope that it would bring the American and German people in closer communion.

A crowd outside gave the Americans a rousing volley of cheers upon their entrance and departure. The stars and stripes were displayed all about the business section of the city.

DR. SEIBER ENDS FOURTEENTH YEAR AT ROANOKE, VA.

The Rev. Dr. Luther Sieber, son of the Rev. Dr. L. L. Sieber, Gettysburg, and graduate of Gettysburg college and the seminary here, has just rounded out his fourteenth year as pastor of St. Mark's congregation, Roanoke, Virginia.

The current number of "The Lutheran" has the following to say about Doctor Sieber's work at Roanoke:

"The budget of the congregation has increased from $3,500 in 1914, of which $700 was for benevolence, to $21,644, of which $9,886 was for benevolence in 1926. Nine hundred new members have been received in this time and two additional churches have been planted in the city. St. Mark's has been broadcasting their services for about two years and have received appreciations of this service from various sections of the country."

ANTIQUE DESK BRINGS $3,350 AT NEW OXFORD

A desk which was sold for $3,350 was the feature of Tuesday's auction of antiques of the late William F. Sheely, New Oxford. The desk was purchased by a dealer in antiques from New York.

RAINFALL DURING APRIL AND MAY LESS THAN IN 2 OTHER YEARS STATISTICS SHOW

While the lamentations over the wet weather of the last two months has been great, there was not as much rain fell during that period as fell during April and May both in 1921 and 1924, Dr. S. W. Frost, director of the state research laboratory, Arendtsville, who has been tabulating the total precipitation during the last nine years.

In May 1921 the rainfall was 8.17 inches, the biggest amount for that month during the nine years while 3.5 inches fell during April, making a total of 11.67 inches for the two-month period. In 1924, the total for the two months was 10.17 inches while during this year the total was 9.2 inches.

A comparative table of the precipitation during the last nine years as compiled by Doctor Frost follows:

Year	April	May
1919	2.30 in.	4.24 in.
1920	5.62 in.	2.31 in.
1921	3.50 in.	8.17 in.
1922	1.3 in.	3.77 in.
1923	2.38 in.	2.62 in.
1924	4.39 in.	5.83 in.
1925	2.34 in.	1.93 in.
1926	2.16 in.	1.80 in.
1927	4.45 in.	4.75 in.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF MOON CAN BE SEEN HERE BY EARLY RISERS ON WEDNESDAY JUNE 15

Amateur astronomers in Gettysburg and elsewhere are awaiting the total eclipse of the moon which will be visible throughout the United States early Wednesday morning, June 15. The moon will enter the shadow at about 1:43 a. m. and leave it at 5:06 a. m. The period of totality or nearest totality will be between 3 and 4 o'clock. It is safe to say without fear of contradiction that of the persons who view the solar phenomenon in Gettysburg the majority of them will see the finish rather than the beginning.

The greatest organized observation of a lunar eclipse in history will take place in the vast reaches of the frozen North on the night of June 14-15. As the earth's shadow veils the moon the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police, missionaries, fur trappers, fur-station factors and the Signal Corps of the United States Army will record weather conditions over the thousands of miles between Nova Scotia and Alaska.

Weather bureaus of the United States and Canada will make special observations. Telescopes from virtually every observatory on the continent will sweep the skies. These extensive preparations, announced publicly for the first time at Swarthmore college by Dr. Harlow Shapley, director of the Harvard Observatory, are for the purpose of determining whether obscure materials in the boundless space between the known stars may interfere with their rays, thus confusing conceptions of distance. Modern theories of the universe may stand or fall upon the results of this gigantic experiment.

CATHOLIC LEAGUE HOLD CONVENTION

Officers Chosen at 27th Annual Meeting Held at St. Francis Xavier Church.

The twenty-seventh annual convention of the Pennsylvania Catholic Beneficial League came to a close Tuesday evening with the presentation of the Knights of Columbus minstrels before a big house. The convention was the most largely attended of any since the league's inception in Lancaster 27 years ago. The official vote of thanks to the local members at the afternoon session was tumultous.

The convention opened with a parade from the K. of C. hall to St. Francis Xavier church where solemn high mass was celebrated by the Rev. Mark E. Stock, with the Rev. Edward O'Flynn, Littlestown, as deacon; the Rev. Joseph N. Whalen, New Oxford, as sub-deacon, and the Rev. John Eberle, Lancaster, as master of ceremonies. The Rev. A. J. Hoenninger, Fairfield, also was present in the sanctuary. The convention was officially welcomed to Gettysburg as the guests of Father Corby council by Father Stock who is chaplain to the grand council.

An outstanding feature of the convention was the address of the Right Rev. Monsignor J. C. Thompson, Steelton, vicar general of the Catholic diocese of Harrisburg, who spoke on "Religion, Education and Patriotism."

Dinner and supper were served to all the delegates and members present in the basement of Xavier hall, by the ladies of Queen of Peace council and young ladies of the Parochial school. John E. Storm, York street, was chairman of the committee in charge of the dining room, assisted by William L. King, A. J. Dillman, Jacob K. Frommeyer, Nicholas A.

STAGE IS SET TO BEGIN PLAY FOR THE SUMMER

Gettysburg's Public Playground To Be Opened Thursday Afternoon With Prizes.

Everything is in readiness for the formal opening of Gettysburg's public playground for the summer of 1927, which will take place tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The merchants of town have generously responded to requests for prizes which will be given the winners of both boys and girls events and contests.

There will be running contests, a volleyball game between two picked teams, a baseball game, bag races, three-legged race, ball throwing contests, races for the girls, checker playing contest, ring contests and a hundred and one other activities to make things interesting for Gettysburg's kiddies throughout the afternoon.

Announces Hours

C. C. "Junnie" Bream, director of play, announced today that the hours throughout the summer season will be from 8:30 to 11:30; 1:00 to 4:00 and 6:00 to 8:00 p. m. Either Mr. Bream or his assistant, Miss Lula Moore Hester, or both, will be in charge of the playground during these hours throughout the season. As in former years, when there is "rain enough to make the grass or ground damp, play will be discontinued and the ground closed in order to protect the health of the children, and parents are asked to please keep their children off the playground except during the hours of supervised play."

A new sliding board will not be ready for operation on the opening day, but ought to be completely installed within the next week, Mr. Bream said, which with the arrival of the new baby swings will put the playground in the best position to take care of all forms of entertainment for the children. The baseball field is in readiness for the youthful, Hornsbys, Cobbs and the like and is expected to be the scene of more intensive activity than any other part of the playground.

Through the combined activities of Mr. Bream and Miss Hester, a program of general activities for the season has been outlined which will rival the programs of previous years.

FRATERNITY GOES INTO NEW HOME

Phi Gamma Delta House on Campus Completed and Occupied by Members.

The Phi Gamma Delta fraternity at Gettysburg college moved into its new $25,000 home erected on the college campus on the site of the chapter's old building Tuesday. During the interim quarters were secured in the town.

The building is the largest and most modern of the many fraternity homes at Gettysburg college. It is completely equipped throughout and has, in addition to the usual social rooms, dining rooms and kitchen, quarters to provide for 20 men who will live in it.

This building is the second structure of the kind ot be erected at the college, Phi Kappa Psi having built the first. The other chapters either bought large residences from individuals or else erected buildings not adapted to house large numbers.

Phi Gamma Delta is the second oldest chapter in Gettysburg and contains in its list of alumni a large number of men of prominence and wealth. Funds for the erection of the building were provided by graduates.

MURDER SUSPECT CAUGHT AT YORK

After Dauphin county authorities had hunted for Mila Halavanya for several weeks, it remained for Detective Ralph Keech, of York, to apprehend the man, who is wanted in Steelton for murder. Detective Keech arrested Halavanya Tuesday afternoon, at a shack near Cunningham's quary.

Halavanya is wanted for one of the most brutal murders ever committed in this section of the country. On May 12, Mrs. Katherine Balic, of Steelton, was found with a dozen stab wounds in her body, and other marks showing a terrific struggle, Halavanya was suspected, and the authorities of Dauphin county and Steelton had followed every possible clue for the past three weeks, with no success whatever. Several days ago Detective Keech received a tip that Halavanya was in York county.

WILBUR'S ADDRESS

ment is continuing to grow and to advance.

"The liberty of the individual which we so glibly speak about, and which this government was founded to secure, is increasingly difficult to define. For instance: twenty years ago, if a man had a broadcasting device, he could have used it to his heart's content, and nobody would have either known or cared what he was doing. But today, such a man who now insists upon his liberty of doing as he pleases would become an intolerable public nuisance, and in time of war a menace to national safety. Congress then, must enact laws for the limitation of the activities of the individual for the protection of the public. The problem of government, whether international, national, state or municipal, is an ever unfolding and developing one.

Learning Reveals Ignorance

"Science, too, is advancing. We may wish to go back to a time when everybody knew, or rather thought they knew, exactly what matter was, but we are living in a time when nobody knows what matter is. It is true that we know vastly more about the structure of the universe, and the relation of the elements and of the constitution of the atom, than we have ever known before, but our increasing knowledge has only exposed the ignorance of our period of greater complacency when everybody knew or thought they knew that the chemical elements were unchanged and unchangeable—immutable portions of the universe created at the very beginning. Our increasing knowledge of chemistry has thus only emphasized the vast extent of our ignorance.

"It is true that we are taking advantage of our increased knowledge to minister to the comfort and happiness of man. It is true that we have learned to accomplish much that is worth while, but that which has been accomplished makes plain to us the challenge of the unknown on every hand. We must go forward. The physicist has his problems like those of the chemist, constantly enlarging and constantly increasing in difficulty. Not long ago the astronomers were trying to solve the problem of a universe with a few thousands of stars. Only six years ago we were told that the universe had enlarged until it was sixty thousand light years across.

Universe Enthralling

"Less than two months ago I spoke to the midshipmen at Annapolis and thought I had the latest figures as to the size of the universe, giving ten million light years as the distance of the farthermost galaxy, but I learned a day or two ago, that the acting head of the Smithsonian Institute had declared his conviction that a galaxy of stars existed so far away that it took light one hundred and forty millions of years to reach this earth and to register its arrival upon the photographic plate placed in the great 100 inch telescope on Mt. Wilson in California.

"I think it was in 1924 that the number of stars in the universe was given as less than one billion, but we are told today that there are probably thirty billions of stars. We are informed, too, that these great invisible suns, known to us only through the great telescopes, and by the chemical changes in the photographic plate, are probably centers of systems like our solar system. As we turn from this contemplation of the infinitely great to the infinitely small, we are told that the structure of the atom resembles that of the solar system, with relatively great spaces between the electrons and the ions.

"Not only is the scientist confronted with the problems of abstract science, resulting from constant investigation of the mysteries presented to his intelligence by his own research and that of his fellow scientist, but he is confronted with the problem of applying his new information to the problems of our daily life; the telegraph, the telephone, the radio, the motion picture, must be made servants of man to minister to his needs and to his upbuilding.

Must Face Reverses

"Into this new world of change and unrest; into this new world of vibrating electrons within atoms; where the very stones at our feet pulsate with energy if they do not live; into this new life when the human life itself is found to be a mysterious in-dwelling principal in a body composed of a vast number of living cells cooperating together for the welfare of the whole; in this new age when commerce, telephone, telegraph, the radio, have brought us in touch with all mankind, we are called upon to live our lives, solve its problems, and pass from the field of life. What then shall we do? Shall we stand on the bank and watch the stream of life pass on, careless, indifferent, self-indulgent, or shall we take our place in the great stream of life and go with it, seeking to solve its problems as we go on?

"Perhaps this question is entirely unnecessary when directed to a class of intelligent young people who have already devoted themselves to the acquisition of knowledge and solutions of the problem of life. But there will come times of discouragement, times when the way seems too hard and too long; times of temptation, to stop and to rest, content with past achievement. But if the world is to advance, if mankind is to reach higher and higher levels, it will be because man has valiantly faced the problems lying before him and has refused to be diverted from the task.

"But to return to our figure of speech, the farmer has hold of the plow handles and he is looking forward. But he is not plowing. He is merely following the plow and directing it. Some force outside of himself, the ox, the horse, the mule, the tractor plow, is doing the work, pulling the plow through the soil and preparing for the crops. The plowman guides the plow so that the forces operating upon it will be effective. Is it not true that if we are to plow effectively in the field of life, we must hitch our plow to some power. When Jesus used the phrase we have quoted, he was calling upon man to follow him. He was to be the guide and men were to follow. It was the dynamic character of his spirit which was to supply the follower with power.

Faith Is Dominant

"It seems to me that it is this leadership which is to supply the urge in our lives. It is this which demands a forward march which gives us the impulse which will carry us through a successful life. If science has done nothing more for us, it has at least given us a conception of a great plan. A plan so mighty in its scope that we are lost in amazement. It has furnished a plan that has calle dfor a Planner of infinite capacity and intelligence. It has given us faith that every problem can be solved and that the solution of the problem will further develop the infinite pains, the infinite care of the creator.

"I do not know how better to express the thought I have in mind concerning the furrow that you are to plow throughout your life, than to say to you that I trust no matter how hard the ground, nor how rocky, no matter what obstacles are encountered, nor how smooth nor easy the task, that there should be the fundamental faith in God as a guide in light and in darkness, and that this faith should sustain us in all the perplexities, and inconsistencies, and intricacies, of the problems which confront us. May I express to you the hope that no joy will be so great, and no sorrow so deep, as to shake your faith in the infinite care of the Creator of the universe. May you ever face forward with a courageous faith that believes every problem may be solved and that if the solution has not yet been achieved, its solution will only further justify and glorify your faith in the infinite Creator and in his love and tenderness for you."

SHOOTERS LEAVE FOR STATE MEET

Representative Crowd Will Attend Annual Tournament at Philadelphia This Week.

The first car load of local trapshooters left here for Philadelphia early this morning, and plan to arrive in time to participate in the practice events scheduled today. In the car were Bell, Miller, Martin and Collins, the latter leaving a day ahead of plans in order to get acquainted with a new gun, as well as the traps. Last night several cars stayed over night in Gettysburg, with shooters from the western end of the state. Among the well known men were J. Morell Hawkins, Doctor Raymaley, E. D. McCoy and Doctor Heisey, of the Wilkinsburg club; R. C. Lamberton, John Huff and Thomas Clark, of Franklin, and several members of the club at Beaver Falls. All were interested in Bell's work to date this year and feel that he is the one to furnish the race for Steve Crothers.

Several other local cars will leave later in the day, Doc Stallsmith and Bair traveling together, with several rooters. H. C. Mitinger will leave today for New York, from where his son is sailing for Brazil and South American points on Saturday. Mitinger will return to Philadelphia tomorrow, in time to line up with his club members in the first events of the state class championships. Sherwood Bostwick left Waynesboro Tuesday night by rail, and will be at the Hotel Walton in time to greet the first of the locals when they arrive today. Bostwick is having a big year and with Miller and Bair is expected to figure on one of the team races on the schedule.

BULLETS DEFEAT MOUNTAINEERS

Gettysburg defeated Mount St. Mary's in the closing game of the season here Tuesday afternoon, 8 to 5, before a large crowd of alumni. The Bullets rallied after a poor start and overcame the Maryland team by spurts in the third and fourth innings.

Al Jones, captain-elect of the Battlefield nine, stepped into the box as relief pitcher for the second time in two days and registered another victory for Gettysburg. The fielding of Bream and Stumpf were the features of the game as well as the sensational catches by Wells and Challenger. Errors by Mount St. Mary's in pinches were largely responsible for the tallies made by Gettysburg.

Glen Rock—A fly killed a sparrow here recently. While the Glen Rock high school baseball nine were practising, Russell Stermer, left fielder, hit a ball, which struck a sparrow which was flying across the infield. Most of the players thought the cover had dropped off the ball, but the dead bird was picked up to prove that the almost impossible had happened.

Motor Tax Brings Back Heavy Horses

London, (AP).—Shire horses, weighing a ton each, and more, as they did in pre-Roman days when their ancestors drew ponderous war chariots over the hilly roads, had three days to themselves at the Royal agricultural hall here, where oats replaced gasoline in the "filling station" which was part of an automobile display a few days previously.

Shire breeders claim that the heavy draft horse is coming back because of the higher tax on the motor lorries.

Henry VIII was the first monarch to recognize the "greate horse," as he established a royal stud in which they predominated. Queen Anne was also an enthusiastic admirer of the Shire and had her gilded coach drawn by long-tailed mares of that breed.

York—A York company has received an order for a cast bronze vault door for the tomb of Dr. Sun-Yat-Sen in Nanking, China. The tomb for the famous Chinese leader will cost a total of $1,500,000, according to reports here.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

BLESSINGS

THERE is a song that I used to rather like which was sung when I was a boy, called "Count Your Blessings."

Well, I am sure that if more of us counted them as they came to us there would be fewer complainers in this world, for many times we are apt to feel that the rough part of the road has been turned over to us, and that all of our bread is stale.

But if we would simply count our blessings just for a single day, what a difference it would make. The blessings of health, a comfortable place to sleep in a simple home, adequate clothes to protect the body, one or two real friends, books—the best in the world for but a few cents each—something at which to work and earn an honest living, the sunshine, the refreshing rain, the beauties of nature, the telephone, the telegraph, the radio, the fast train, the efficient mail service, both by air and rail, free public libraries and picture galleries—but why go further?

The poorest is able to walk out into this big world and own much more in his heart than the richest in money with no love in his heart.

I walked out into the woods that comprise a part of my home grounds. I thought of all that this spot of beauty had cost in work and sacrifice. Then I sat on one side of the rustic chairs and listened to the returned birds and was thrilled at the gladness that poured out of their throats. I watched them bathe in the pool and I knew that they were happy. Then I realized that these visitors cost me nothing. The wild flowers, new with the early spring, and the full leaved trees—just a few of the gifts that money cannot really buy.

Blessings? What a world of them. Only those who fail to serve are unhappy because "the whole world is wrong."

Just Folks

By Edgar A. Guest

He's living it all over, the boyhood that I knew,
He's doing in his fourteenth year just what I used to do,
And I at five and forty sit back and watch the lad
Repeating all the pleasures and all the tricks I had.

At fourteen I was that way, that way I threw a ball;
My stockings sagged just that way. Oh, I've been through it all.
In every game I shouted to urge the fellows on
And wrangled with our rivals until my voice was gone.

Now evening finds him tattered and thick with dust and dirt,
And there he stands before us with the buttons off his shirt.
"Was ever boy so dirty?" sighs his mother in despair.
I look at him and chuckle for 'tis I am grinning there.

"Just look at him," she mutters. "Has he no pride at all?"
As if a thought for neatness could win a game of ball.
I gaze at him and chuckle for true to life I know
There stands the boy that I was just thirty years ago.

SHIPS TO SALUTE CAPT. LINDBERGH

Steamer to Change Course So That Passengers May Get a Glimpse of Flier.

U. S. Cruiser Memphis, (By Wireless to AP), June 8.—When Captain Lindbergh heard that the Bellanca plane Columbia had landed at Eisleben he sent a radio congratulating the Columbia's pilot, Clarence D. Chamberlin, and remarked to the correspondents:

"It was a very fine piece of work and another feather in the cap of aviators. Feats such as the Columbia's all have a tendency to aid in the development of aviation throughout the world."

Ships now on the Atlantic, are anxious to salute the first New York-to-Paris flier. The captain of the Memphis yesterday morning received a message from Captain Fried of the President Roosevelt, saying that the 800 passengers on his steamship were anxious to get a glimpse of Lindbergh. He requested the course of the Memphis, which was sent him.

It is expected the vessels will meet and it is the intention of the American flying ace to stand on the bridge and acknowledge the tributes.

The boy who was so feted in Paris, Brussels and London that it seemed to him he would never again have a chance to rest, is already showing the benefit of his trip. He has found his sea legs and is thoroughly enjoying the voyage. His tired eyes have disappeared and he is looking fresh and bright for his appearance in his homeland.

WIVES GET GIFTS BEFORE SAILING

New York, June 8.—(AP)—Mrs. Wilda Chamberlin, wife of the pilot of the Bellanca monoplane Columbia, received a check for $15,000 yesterday to carry to her husband in Germany. Mrs. Grace Levine, wife of the financial backer of the flight and passenger-relief-pilot-navigator, received a gold watch to take to her husband.

After ceremonies in the Brooklyn Borough Hall, at which the presentations were made by the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, of which Levine is a member, the fliers' wives, left for their homes to prepare to sail at midnight to rejoin their husbands.

The journey that took Clarence D. Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine less than two days will take the wives ten days. They chose the first ship sailing after success of the flight was established, the Berlin of the North German Lloyd line, which will arrive in Bremen on June 17.

The Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce offered a prize of $15,000 this spring if the Bellanca monoplane was the first to Paris. When Charles Lindbergh got to Paris first the offer was withdrawn, but Ralph Jonas, president of the Chamber, then offered $5000 if the Bellanca should be the second to make the trip. But when it was learned that Chamberlin and Levine had beaten Lindbergh's distance record the amount was again raised to $15,000.

All the money goes to Chamberlin, as Levine had stipulated before leaving that he was not to receive any part of the prize.

French Chefs Will Show How They Cook

Paris.—(AP)—The best French chefs are going to show the average householder how, figuratively, "to make good ragout out of an old shoe."

Brains, says the cooks, should be boiled, broiled, stewed, roasted or stirred into every dish. They propose to show the public what marvels they can do with cheap materials. They are going to exhibit an average household's daily marketing, weigh everything, calculate the exact cost and produce the finished meals. They expect to prove that the cost of living can be brought down and living standards sent up at the same time.

Little Jack Rabbit

by David Cory

Well, now let me think. Where did your Uncle Dave leave off in the last story? Oh, yes, our little rabbit was talking to Mrs. Wader, the lady heron bird. So he was, and no mistake.

"Come around in a week to see my youngsters take their first lesson in flying," she said, as he politely lifted his little khaki cap and bid her goodbye.

"I'll come, make no mistake,
As sure as I'm fond of angel cake," he answered in poetry. Wonderful, isn't it, to think that a little rabbit can rhyme his words when he talks to his friends, the woodland birds. Goodness me! there goes "Remmy," my faithful typewriter, into poetry, although he made no pretty verse. Maybe he was running too fast and the little bell was late in warning him!

Now, to return to my story. About a week later the little rabbit started out from the Old Bramble Patch to visit Mrs. Wader, the blue heron lady bird. He was anxious to learn how a mother bird teaches her little ones to fly. So on he hopped, clipperty clip, lipperty lip, his knapsack bouncing up and down on his back and his red-striped candy cane swinging from his left paw.

"I've never seen a little bird taught to fly," he murmured to himself, as on he hurried. By and by, as he passed by the Tall Pine Tree, in which Professor Jim Crow had built a fine bungalow, he heard the familiar caw of that wise old person.

"Learn a little day by day.
Never waste your time away.
Life should be a daily school
Governed by the Golden Rule."

"I'm on my way to learn something," cried the little rabbit, stopping short, just like that, quick as the wind that blows off your hat.

"Glad to hear it," answered Professor Jim Crow, with a wink. "May I enquire what particular thing you are bent on knownig?"

"How little birds are taught to fly?" replied the bunny boy, balancing himself on his left hind leg.

"Who is giving lessons this morning?" asked the inquisitive old black bird.

"Mrs. Wader, the lady bird heron," answered the little rabbit.

"She is a very good mother," said Professor Jim Crow. "And no doubt a wise teacher. Remember what she says and use your eyes, little rabbit. And don't forget to repeat all you learn to mother this evening."

And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

Chaperons Back To Help Girls Marry

London, (AP).—The chaperon, so wohle-heartedly abolished in the years during and after the war, has come back to fashionable London and is more in evidence at dances and other public functions than at any time since Victorian days.

One reason for this, according to society gossip, is that young unchaperoned girls, while having a generally good time, have not made good marriages or have remained single, while the girls more carefully brought up and chaperoned have secured the best plums in the marriage basket.

It is seldom now that society girls go to a ball or dinner without their mothers or some woman relative while many society dames with moderate incomes are in great demand as paid chaperons.

UNVEIL MEMORIAL .. TO ED. J. RYAN

Ceremony Is Held At Mt. St. Mary's College, Tuesday Morning.

Emmitsburg, Md., June 8.—The ceremonies in connection with the unveiling of the monument in memory of the late Prof. Edmund Ryan, dean of the English department at Mount St. Mary's college took place Tuesday morning with a solemn requiem mass in the college church at which the Rt. Rev. Monsignor B. J. Bradley, president of the college, was the celebrant. The services were attended by the alumni, attending commencement, students, friends and relatives of Professor Ryan.

The address was delivered by the Rt. Rev. Maurice E. McAulliffe, auxiliary bishop, of Hartford, Connecticut, a life-long friend and fellow-townsman, of the late professor. The bishop was also a student under Professor Ryan at Mount St. Mary's.

The monument is a Gothic cross, standing 12 feet high on two metrical bases made of Westerly granite. A mass of flowers, covering the grave were gathered by the seminary students.

Dr. John F. Dunne, who was formerly headmaster of Staten Island academy, New York, and succeeded Professor Ryan as head of the English department at Mount St. Mary's, was chairman of the memorial committee. A Ryan memorial reference library will be established by the committee in connection with the college library.

A sentry between the United States and Canada would be about as appropriate as a fire extinguisher on top of the Great Ppramid.—The Honorable Vincent Massey.

Dividend Notice

The BOARD of DIRECTORS of the GETTYSBURG NATIONAL BANK at its regular weekly meeting on June 7, declared the regular semi-annual dividend of FIVE PER CENT and an EXTRA dividend of one per cent, payable July 1st, 1927, to stockholders of record June 7th, 1927. Checks will be mailed in due course to the stockholders.

The business of the consolidated banks—GETTYSBURG NATIONAL BANK and LINCOLN TRUST COMPANY—during the first six months of the consolidation indicate a greater volume of business and a resulting larger NET PROFIT than was foreseen by the officers and committees having the negotiations under consideration. The BOARD of DIRECTORS therefore decided that a more liberal policy as regarding DIVIDENDS might well be inaugurated at this time. After the fund of $13,500, to pay the above REGULAR and SPECIAL DIVIDEND is deducted from the NET EARNINGS for the period, there yet remains a very substantial sum for addition to SURPLUS.

CHAPTER I

The darting quicksilver loveliness of Mary!

"Thirty Love!"

A quick scurry of white slippered feet, a swoop upon the ball before it touched the sun-hardened ground, and over the net the white sphere sailed with the grace of a bird.

Oh, the beauty of Mary with the sun coaxing forth dizzying sparks from her flaming head as she whirled and darted and leaped. A red-headed mediaeval flapper playing tennis at Camelot, with Lancelot in the minute person of Bob astride a broomstick. The small heart of Bob filled to bursting with the pride of possession of Mary—too large a load for small Bob. What succor in clenching the end of the broomstick till it shot from his moist grasp? What mitigation of the load in straddling fiercely the somewhat grimy white charger and galloping madly in place? Young Robert longed for ease. Young Robert wished passionately to transfer a portion of the load that filled his heart to bursting. Young Robert was commanded to "Sit quiet there you jumping flea or I'll sock yuh!" and the overcharged dam burst.

"She's my sister."

"Yeh?" Mild interest. "Which one?"

"The red-headed one," said young Robert, and his honest blue eyes shone. "The red-headed one's my sister." Words rushing out with the eagerness of long restriction. "The one with the red hair you can see is my sister, Mister, because you can see I got red hair. We all got red hair, even my brother Dave's got red hair because my Dad had red hair and my grand-dad had—"

"Yeh, I know, kid. Your grand-dad had red hair," dryly.

Young Robert beamed. "How'd you know?" whereat the long youth ducked Robert's head in the sand and laughed. "You're a good kid. What's your name, son?"

"Bob Sullivan, only today I'm Lancelot, and Mary's Elaine because she's tanned."

Nice teeth this long youth revealed when he threw his head back and laughed. "Whaddeyemean, kid—Elaine because she's tanned?"

Young Robert ceased clutching the white charger and burrowed close to the stranger's side while he gazed out upon the hills of his vision tipped with purple and majesty and gold and mouthed the words as though partaking of their beauty before giving them over, "You know—'Elaine the fair, Elaine the lovable, Elaine—the lily maid of Astolat.'"

The long youth put his arm about young Robert's shoulders and held him tightly, then tousled his red head. "Come back, son! Elaine's walking away with the game."

Young Robert resumed his seat upon the white charger and shouted, "Ho, ho!" as he galloped madly. The beautiful clipped perfection of Mary's strokes, the leap of her body at the ball overhead, the swoops, the swirls, the darts and light, scurrying feet—"That's my sister Mary," shouted Bob to the rows of interested parents and variegated relatives, and they smiled in amusement at the pride of possession shining on the face of this young male.

Hearty applause greeted the end of the game. It had been a good set and the players had been well matched, although the red-headed girl did seem to walk away with it. Well—they had heard about this Sullivan girl. "Playground champion of the city, isn't she, Betty?"

"Yes, Mother, she is, and she's a marvel, too, everyone says, and now winning this game from Emily Bill puts her in the champion class. Isn't she beautiful, Mother?"

"Well—beautiful—well, now, if you like the type—"

"She's a lovely type and she's my sister!" Thus young Robert, while the long young man laughed and pulled him away. "I see 'Elaine' coming and by the light in her eye you're going to catch it, Son!"

"I never catch it, I never—"

"Well, but this time, Young Robert!"

Nemesis in the glowing person of Mary with racquet under her arm. "Bob, I heard you! Oh, Robert, why do you talk so much? You're a little talkative girl, that's what you are, young Robert, and tonight I shall tell Dave all." Dramatically. "Do you hear? All!"

The long young man stood with arms folded and thought. "She is beautiful, but I doubt that she knows it. I like the way her hair swings against her cheeks and the straight cut across her forehead. Green eyes. They seem to swim. Beautiful mouth. Tan and freckles. Elaine, the lily-maid of Astolat!" The young man grinned.

"Are you laughing at Robert?" Mary turned her eyes to the tall young man. "Has he related the family history to you? And if he hasn't, how old is your friendship?"

"Not as old as I intend to make it, and he has told me nothing that might not have been heard by you."

"Well." Mary dismissed that topic with a shrug. "He will talk, I suppose. Robert, I won!" Young Robert kicked himself free from her grasp. "Mary, I gotta introduce my friend. Permit me to introduce my friend," and waited courteously for his friend to contribute his name.

The long young man held out his hand. "I'm delighted to meet the tennis champion of Garden City, Miss Sullivan. My name is Wally Mason."

Mary smiled ruefully as she placed her hand in his. "Just how conventional is this, Mr. Mason?"

"Just how conventional is this, Mr. Mason?"

"What does it matter, Miss Sullivan, when your eyes are green, and green eyes in all the world of eyes are my favorites?"

"Interesting," murmured Mary, and both laughed.

She walks delightfully, he thought. He attributed it, the swing from the hips, the lilt of it, to the years of tennis probably. As a matter of fact, it was rather more than that. The tilt of Mary's soul that stood on tip-toe. This desire within her to walk the tops of mountains. Mountains that touched the clouds. To live in the soul's high places, that was the urge within her. "My life will be beautiful," sang Mary. "I will make it beautiful. It will be a matter of heights—loftiness—beautiful spaces under the blue heavens, where other kindred spirits such as I have walked. I will have nothing to do with the valleys of despair. I will have nothing to do with the chasms in which sorrow lies buried."

Nights with the moon washing in through the window Mary lay awake to hear the message whispered to her by the silent flood. "You Mary," it rippled and sang. "You Mary! What will you do with life? For it must be, what will you do with Life, Mary, and not what will Life do with you. You must never permit that, Mary. Never permit it the upper hand, or it will softly beat you and down you till you are a mass of nothingness without even the capacity for suffering. Think of lacking the capacity to suffer, Mary."

"No, no! I shall rise above everything."

Steadfast stream of ghostly light injecting strength into her quicksilver body.

You remember your mother, Mary?

Her mother. Pallid little mother with the life beaten from her. Beaten from her with whips. You shall not enjoy your rightful heritage of happiness. You shall not! Beaten and downed and scourged, only to rise again. "You were rather wonderful, Mother." She had said that to her, whispered it from between pallid lips on that last day. Why hadn't she waited until Mary could have helped? Why had she gone? That pain beneath Mary's left breast that ate and gnawed. "Oh, mother! You were so brave! But I shan't ever let Life get a chance at me, mother, never, never I shan't!"

MEMORY OF DEAD MORMONS TO LIVE

To Honor Those Utahans Who Answered Call to Arms in Mexican War.

Salt Lake City.—Eighty-one years ago 500 Mormons then enroute from the western edge of civilization to a new location for a colony of their own answered the call for volunteers in the war with Mexico. The memory of their sacrifice and valor will be perpetuated by a huge monument carved out of 450 tons of solid granite and representing 22 years of endeavor.

The history chisled into a small mountain of stone, forming a base and background for a bronze statue of one of the warriors, is a record of bravery, courage and devotion to country. This response to the nation's call involved an infantry march of two thousand miles from Council Bluffs, Iowa, by way of Santa Fe, New Mexico, to San Diego, California, through a wilderness inhabited by savages and wild beasts, across deserts where for lack of water there were no living animals and over mountains until then virtually untraversed.

Although in their westward movement the hardy soldiery clashed with the enemy garrison at Tucson and "drove them out with their own artillery," according to war department records, the breaking of a wagon route to the Pacific was "unmarked by a single act of injustice."

More Than 200 Enlist

Eighty-one members of the volunteer brigade who offered services to President Polk and were mustered into the army under the authority of Colonel Stephen W. Kearney at the Iowa post, re-enlisted for six months additional service in the Mexican war. Seven participated in the discovery of gold in California, while an invalided detachment of 150 joined Brigham Young's original pioneer company in Salt Lake Valley and helped found the commonwealth of Utah.

The monument was designed by Gilbert Riswold who spent more than four years on the carving. The basal design, including two reflection pools on east and west sides, is the work of Frank C. Walker, architect.

The Utah legislature appropriated $100,000, available when matched dollar for dollar by private contribution, and the state of Arizona helped provide funds for financing the monument. Great numbers of residents of California and Nevada contributed while offerings likewise were received from residents of nearly all states in the Union.

President Coolidge, the war department and the United States army will be officially represented at the unveiling ceremonies here on May 30.

MAKING SAFES SAFE IS IDEA

Berlin,—(AP)—Yeggmen are likely to be exposed to gases more poisonous than any ever used in the world war soon.

A German inventor has evolved a safe which will produce such gases the moment a drill penetrates the steel.

Gas producing crystals are deposited in a bed of porous concrete between the steel walls. The crystals are a compound of chlorine, carbon monoxide and hydrocyanic acid. The mixture is said to be not only more deadly than anything used in the war, but capable of penetrating any mask yet invented.

The heat from the drill or blow lamp sets off the chemicals, which are said to retain their efficiency indefinitely.

The inventor believes his device will make lighter steel construction of safes possible.
